VA Bureaucrat Survey Monkey Business

Memorial Day

Ignore hobgoblins like this and similar. It means that a file or page in/on my website will open. It does NOT mean that you will have a flat tire on your car or that you will have to call a plumber because your toilet will be stopped up or that Dump will hack into your computer and steal your money. For an explanation of cyber nonsense like this, See this:

I just took a VA survey. I get a lot of them in my email. And after I took it, I wondered:

If anybody REALLY wants to know..............
On my website; NOT Google or anything related to it:
Big Time VA Mess!

Does anybody really care or other than genuine medical personnel is the VA populated primarily by bureaucrats?

Bizarre:

Because of the pervasive "Culture of Fear" that permeates the VA, I understand why the VA is terrified of things like Google and does not want its employees to open stuff in it of refer to it. Because this is the 21st Century, the Information Age, and therefore the internet; most other entities e.g. government agencies, banks, credit card companies and financial agencies, hospitals etc. have figured out how to deal with and have safeguards against security problems. This makes the VA pretty much Stone Age and irresponsible about it..............but whatever. This is why I create CDs and thumb drives for VA personal and why I try to refer to things on my website and, if possible avoid anything on Google. But often Google is the most informative about my issues. This way, VA employees can read this (the CD or thumb drive) on a personal computer and not a VA computer. I do this with my doctors, pharmacist, dietician, clerks etc. and it works very well without jeopardizing anybody with the VA.
